

Makers of Cold Pressed Rosehip Seed Oil

100% Chemical Free & Preservative Free Produce

Rosehip plant is a shrub grown in cold regions like Kashmir & Parts of Utrakhand in India.

The plant does not completely shed its leaves in season change.

The oval shaped red berries are plucked in and around autumn and left to dry.

It takes about 4-6 weeks for berries to dry completely as needed.

The outer soft dried shell with invisible needles is removed to take out the tiny light yellow coloured seeds.

A medium sized berry contains about 5-7 seeds.

Deseeding is done manually so that the seed inside is not damaged. A 1kg dried red berries gives about 620 grams of tiny light yellow coloured seeds.

The seeds are left to shade dry again for 1-2 days.

Thereafter the seeds are cold pressed using the traditional technique of cold pressing to make the oil.

Making of cold pressed rosehip oil is time consuming and labour intensive. A kg of tiny seeds gives about 40 grams of oil only.

The produced rose hip oil is rich orange in colour and nutrient rich with vitamin C, A, B3, D & E with tannins, carotenoids, selenium and much more.
